Hello, Circe. Circe spun around, wondering where the voice had come from. Then something soft brushed against her legs. It was Pflanze. The odd sisters' cat was a tortoise-shell telepathic beauty with orange, black, and white markings.

"Pflanze!" Circe squealed with delight, though it seemed Pflanze wasn't as happy to see Circe. She just looked up at Circe with narrowed eyes, shifting her weight from one marshmallow-white paw to the other.

As long as Circe could remember, Pflanze had always been there. When Circe was younger, the cat had almost been like another sister. The most levelheaded sister in the house. The wisest, and most mysterious. There was so much more to Pflanze than Circe had ever suspected. And it was all in her mothers' journals. She had always felt she and Pflanze had an understanding. But that day something seemed different.

I'm so disappointed in you, my little one, the cat said. But there is no time to discuss my broken heart. I must get back to your mothers. They have been waiting for you. We all have. Pflanze gave her a disapproving look.

"I know, Pflanze, I'm sorry. I was trapped in the Beginning."

Pflanze blinked and said, So the house took you to the place of its birth,
